MASTER'S THESIS

Title: Multimodal data-driven learning for secondary EFL Learners: L2 pragmatic instruction on requests (Advisor: Professor Sun-Young Oh)

- Designed a multimedia platform using authentic videos and created collaborative worksheets for inferring, sharing, and practicing pragmatic knowledge
- Analyzed spoken discourse completion test data using ordinal regression in R, identifying immediate sociopragmatic gains with limited long-term retention
- Conducted qualitative analysis of guiding questions and interviews, suggesting that learners inferred pragmatic knowledge from multimodal cues and visual enhancements

RESEARCH EXPERIENCE

Research assistant

An evaluation of part-of-speech taggers and dependency parsers on beginner-level Korean learner data (PI: Professor Sun-Young Oh) 2025-Current Seoul National University, College of Education

- Compiled a corpus of over 400 texts from middle school learners and recorded their metadata using XML
- Evaluating models by comparing their output to gold-standard annotations, and analyzing causes of discrepancies such as learner errors and model training data
- Creation of a gold annotation dataset is in progress, following the Universal Dependencies and Cambridge Learner Corpus Error Coding Schemes

Research assistant

Acquisition of L2 interactional competence through AI Chatbots (PI: Professor Sun-Young Oh) 2024

Seoul National University, Learning Sciences Research Institute

- Conducted stimulated recall interviews and semi-structured interviews on L2 writers' prompt-by-prompt engagement with ChatGPT feedback during draft revision
- Qualitative analyses revealed the role of the affective factors, L2 motivation, and AI literacy that interact with, and possibly help mitigate the limitations of L2 proficiency
